

ABOUT THE FILMMAKER

Todd Darling - Director

Todd Darling is a Berkeley, CA based filmmaker. His first documentary, "Año Nuevo" aired nationally on PBS on "Latino Consortium", screened at the Mill Valley Film Festival, and won the Eric Sevareid Award from the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences. Darling covered news for Vice News Tonight at Standing Rock, ND. He directed reality shows, "Murder In Small Town X" for Fox, and three seasons of "Laguna Beach" for MTV, and helped produce the international broadcast of five Olympic Games, and one World Cup. His career includes work as a Director of Photography, a Producer and an Editor on more than one hundred episodes of nationally broadcast/cable/streaming television. His own independent documentaries include "A Snow Mobile For George" (Netflix, Big Sky, Sedona, Santa Barbara), "High Tech Families" (PBS), "Black Rock Horse" (Big Sky Documentary Film Festival), and he was the Executive Producer of "Saviors of the Forest" that was in competition at the Sundance Film Festival and screened on Encore. Currently, Darling is at work on a limited documentary series about dams, rivers and the conflict between the industrial users of dams and the Indigenous tribes who live on those rivers.
